A correspondent of the Rutland Herald, gives the following particulars of an unfortunate affair in that county.

Wells, Ave. 13, 1841.—I hasten to inform you of an unfortunate tran action which has just happened in this place, which has resulted in the death of a person by the name of Martin Bebee, who was found much bruised and nearly speechless on Wednesday of this week in the stable of John Howe, the Inn-keeper of this place. Bebee died of the wounds in about one hour and a half. The magistrates forthwith summoned 15 persons as a jury of inquest to examine as to the cause of the death of the decaesed. After hearing the testimony introduced and making an examination of the body, they came in with a manimous opinion that Martin Bebee came to his death by Felony in consequence of severe treatment by the hands of Orson Cone of Poultney as principal, and Cephas Wilcox as accessary, upon which the Wells, Ave. 13, 1841.-I hasten to inform you death by Felony in consequence by the hands of Orson Cone of Poultney as principal, and Cephas Wilcox as accessary, upon which the said Cone and Wilcox were committed to Rutland iail to await their trial at the county court next to be holden at Rutland. Cone and Wilcox were seen to follow the deceased to the shed, and were gone about fifteen minutes and returned together, and when asked where Martin was, said they had floored him. The principal in the case insulted and abused said Bebee much previous to leaving the house.

WHIG MEETING.

We would direct the attention of the Whigs of Burlington, to the meeting on Monday evening. Unfortunately, it seems the notice of the former meeting was not so widely circulated as to bring it to the knowledge o. all who take interest in such matters, & whose counsels are deemed desirable. The committee have therefore deemed it proper to call another primary meeting for the purpose of taking up anew the subject of a candidate for town representative. A good cause blance of unfairness, and most certain we are, that no true whig would for one moment consent to a nomination that was not clearly and manifestly the unequivocal expression of his party. Let's have a full attendance, a fair unprejudiced expression, and then you have been may be.

We regret to learn from the National Intelligencer, says the Evening Journal, that a disposition has been manifested in Congress, to let the Land bill and the Bankrupt Bill go by the board, in case the Bank bill should be vetoed. Such a course would be unjustifiable and suicidical in the extreme. These measures have their own intrinsic merits, and their fate should not be linked in with others which have no connection with them.

FROM WASHINGTON.

[Correspondedce of the Albany Daily Advertiser.] WASHINGTON, August 12, 1841. I am here in the mides of much excitement, aris-in from the now general helief that the President will veto the National Bank Bill. It is true that he is not vet irrevocably pledged to do so, but so many cr-cumstances dully transpire to shew his inclination that way, and not one (except his silence) to prove the contracy, that little doubt exists but that he will take that fatal step. The events of the last election campaign are so fresh in my reccellection, and I said so much and went so far to promote the election of John Tyler, that I cannot give him up yet, and I still hope for the best. Last night I called on Mr. Clay, and found him disengaged. He spoke freely of the expected veto, and said with emphasis, that the great Whig party had gained a bootless victory, if it was in the power of one man to defeat the will of the nation expressed through Congress—that he should now go for an alteration of the Constitution, limiting the veto power to a mere check, to throw back a bill to the House where it originated, to be passed again or rejected by a majority.

Congress or at least the House of Representatives, will adjourn over after to morrow until Monday, to visit Annapolis and the ships of war there—the President will accompany them. There is no want of rain [here; vegetation appears luxuriant, and the weather is not uncomfortably warm. Yours, &c.

We copy the following from the National

Intelligencer of Saturday, from which it will be seen that doubt is entertained as to the fate of the land and Bankrupt bills. Another week, however will put all these questions at rest.

In the Senate the Land Distribution and Pre-emption bill, and in the House of Representatives the Bankrupt bill, were yesterday discussed, without coming to a decision upon either of them.

We wish we could give our readers any satisfactory opinion about the ultimate decision of these bills.—We regret to say that the fate of both of them is more doubtful now than it was a week ago, and has become so under the suspense which has existed, and yet exists, as to the fate of the Bank bill which has passed both Houses, and is in the hands of the Executive. We yet hope for the best, however.

Of the decision of the President upon the Bank Bill nothing is yet known, or can now be known before Monday, this being the day fixed upon for the visit of the President and his friends, Heads of Departments, Members of Congress, and others, to the United States soventy-four gun ship Derawans, now lying in Chesapeke Bay, off the harbor Annapolis.

To enable its Members to make this useful and instructive visit of inspection, the House of Representatives, when it adjourned yesterday, adjourned over to Monday.—

Monday.

The Navy Pension Bill has passed both houses, and was presented to the President on Friday for his approval.

THE VETO POWER.

The present condition of things is an exemplification of the immense influence of of this power. The whole country from we must submit. But we must confess we the will of the people, as reflected by their immediate Representatives, might bear sway .- Richmond Whig. THE BANK BILL.

We have no further intelligence, of a definate character, from Washington, in relation to the action of the Pre-ident upon the Bill to establish the Fiscal Bank. We publish, today, a communication from an occasional correspondent at Washington, who has ample means of judging of public measures which occur, or are likely to occur there. We do not agree with him, in all the grounds he assumes. We hold that the President is bound to give his signature to the Bank Bill,—bound by his obligations to the great Party that placed him in the eminent position he now occupies—bound, as one of that Party, by the pledge that has been given to the people, that these measures of relief shall be adopted and carried out—bound by a due regard to the necessities of the people and the convenience of the Government—and bound finally, by the examples of the sound patriots and sagacious statesmen who have preceded him in the management of our public affairs. If he disregards these high obligations, and, out of mere pertinaciousness of opinion, vetoes this bill, we do not wise to conceal the d g ex of mortification and disappointmen with which we shall receive such a determination.

But then, suppose the Veto comes. What is to be done next? I st the great Whig party to fall asunder. THE BANK BILL.

and the convenience of the Government—and bound finally, by the examples of the sound patriots and sagacious statesmen who have preceded him in the management of our public affairs. If he distrants these high obligations, and, out of mere pertinacious ness of opinion, vetoes this bill, we do not wise to conceal the dg e-of mortific ation and disappointment with which we shall receive such a determination.

But then, suppose the Veta comes. What is to be done rext? Is the great Whig party to fall asunder? Are the men who banded themselves together, and, by an almost super-human effort, shock off the most imposing despotism that ever threatened destruction to a free government, are such men, just when they have almost perfected their great work of reform, to break up in confusion, and forego all the benefits and blessings for the production of which their umon was cemented? Because one man has disappointed our expectations—and that upon but one point—are we to suppose that none could be a blind then several that upon but one point—are we to suppose that none could be a blind that one would suppose that none could be a blind then one would suppose that none could be a blind the one would suppose that none could be a blind then one would suppose that none could be a blind then one would suppose that none could be a blind then one would suppose that none could be a blind then one would suppose that none could be a blind then one would suppose that none could be a blind then of the face of Van Burenism, that one would suppose that none could be a blind the or the course of the the President. Conjectures are various and contradictory, in regard to it; but as the question must have been disposed of previous to Thursday, it is idle to speculate about probabilities or consequences. A very few days will put us in possession of the result, and we will then judge President Tyler by his reasons.

The President has already signed the bill to repeal the sub-treasury, and if he vetoes the bank bill, he virtually takes to himself the custody of the public money. Will he do it? If he does, he should give most cogent reasons for the step.

The following, from the correspondent of the Commercial Advertiser is the latest we have from Washington.

Satenday, August 14.

The House did not sit to-day. About 100 of the members went to Annapolis, where, by invitation of Com. Morris, they were to visit the U. S., ship Delaware.

The President was expected to join them, but he did not go. It is said that, as the Senate had refused to ladourn, and as the fate of the great measure of the session was still undecided, he thought it improper to leave his post at this juncture.

The President has signed the bill to repeal the subtraction of some, the sole depository of the public money. The law of 1788, which is till in force, savs the Treasurer "shull receive and keep the public money," but his duty and that of the Secretary of the Treasurer while he will exploy banks or individuals as the depositories, and specie, Treasury notes, or notes of specie-paying banks, will be received in payment of public dues.

Some suppose that the President has not yet made up his mind as to his course on the bank bill. We shall soon know, as he cannot retain the bill longer than Thursday.

Some politicians, who have made themselves ridiculous in the public eye, by over-much refining—and others—selfish and unprincipled—who, under the shield of affected purism, have never scrupled to perpetrate any political atrocity, which might redound to their aggrandizement—have sought to confound to their aggrandizement—have sought to confound Principles and Abstractions. There are no two things so nearly allied, more distinct in their nature and attributes—unless it be a horse-chestmut and a chestnut-horse. An Abstraction is a dizembodied Principle. A Principle is viral, active, pro-creative and always leads to results—Utter sterility is of the very escence of an Abstraction—when it loses this distinctive feature, it ceases to be itself. Universal equality is an Abstraction. The greatest good to the greatest number is a Principle. If you were to put the Government into the hands of a set of pure Abstraction—is the ground, in less than a fortnight, or prove recreant to their professions. Each one would have his own abstraction—and all would concur only in one thing—in repudiating every thing practical. If they could abstraction—and all would concur only in one thing—in repudiating every thing practical. If they could not compass the extremity of good, they would take nothing—deeming aught short of the greatest tantamount to the greatest evil. They are a rare generation—and as there is no procreativity about them, they must die out before long. Another crop may arise at some distant day by spontaneous parturition or, like the armed men of Cadmus, from Dragon's teeth. Countestell Mexican Dollars.—On Saturday last a drover from New Hampshire, named Ebenezer Watson, went into Spear's office with $100 in specie to exchange, and Mr. Spear detected no less than 54 counterfeit Mexican dollars in the lot. He took the man to the police court, where he told a very plain story that he received the money in payment for some cattle, which he sent to Canada to be sold. He gave up the spurious coin to constable Pierce. There was no doubt of the truth of his statement, and no proceedings were instituted against him.—

GEN. HABBISON AND Mr. CLAY.—The extract from a letter, writtenfin 1838, by Gen. Harrison to Mr Brent and published by the latter gentleman, leaves no room for doubt, that, at that time, the artifices of Mr. Clay's enemies had induced the General to harbor suspicions of Mr Clay's friendly feelings towards himself. But that these suspicions were entirely removed, and that the most cordial personal relations afterwards sphsisted between them, is well known. ALBURGH SPRINGS.

THAT large and ary Mansson, at Alburgh Springs, is again reopened by Mr. Samuel Mills, for the reception of visitors during the present season. The report industriously put in circulation, that fresh water has been let into the Springs, is an error, without the least shadow of truth, as no alteration has been had, in, or about the Springs since the acquaintance of the subscriber with the Spring, in 1835. But the Springs remain that great Fountain, pure and unadule rated, not in need of a weekly attending physician to recommend her, as do her sattellites. Accommodations good.
